

Frank Costigliola, Professor of History at University of Connecticut, spoke on April 17, 2009, about "The Perils of Intimacy: Harry Hopkins as Franklin D. Roosevelt's National Security Adviser" at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Frank Costigliola speaks about his research on Harry Hopkins, Franklin D. Roosevelt's national security advisor. Costigliola's work draws from primary resources such as the diary of Anna Roosevelt and recorded phone conversations of Louise Hopkins.

Frank Costigliola (front center), Professor of History at the University of Connecticut, held an afternoon seminar with graduate students from the History Department at The Ohio State University.

Peter Hahn (left), Professor and Chair of History at The Ohio State University, moderated the afternoon graduate student seminar with Frank Costigliola, held April 17, 2009.

Frank Costigliola (left) met with two Ohio State graduate students in history about his research on Harry Hopkins. He reiterated the importance of studying the historical perspectives of women who were close to Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry Hopkins.